Audioengine also makes the Audioengine A5+ Wireless, which are essentially a larger and better sounding version of the A2+ Wireless, for those willing to spend a little more. Verdict: Audioengine's A2+ Wireless is a fantastic entry-level speaker system for anybody who doesn't want to spend more than $300.

These Affordable Speakers Are the Perfect Desktop Upgrade

Review by Andrew S. on 22 Oct 2020 review stating Great sound, never knew what I was missing. I have had a fairly decent 5.1 stereo in my office for years, and thought it was "good". Last month I added these two A5+ speakers and the difference is incredible.

A5+ Speaker System — Audioengine

Audioengine rates the built-in amplifier of the Audioengine A5+ Wireless speakers at 50 watts per channel continuous. There's plenty of power available. It also puts the frequency response of the speakers at 50 to 22,000 hertz ±1.5dB. That's one very impressive specification.

Review: Audioengine A5+ Wireless speakers (review)

AudioEngine A2+ Review. These speakers are small. Component Overview: ... The verdict after the DSP correction is pretty good. They don't play really loud, they don't image very well, but they are at least tonally neutral and play into the 48Hz range when positioned in a corner.

AudioEngine A2+ Review - NO Audiophile Review

The aptX Bluetooth HD functionality of the new A5+ Wireless is important to many people who enjoy streaming music from their mobile devices. This is a great new feature to add to the A5+ and Audioengine did it right. When it comes to our overall thoughts on the speaker, our opinion hasn't changed. We still rank the A5+ (in both it's wireless and non-wireless variants) as one of the top ...

Audioengine A5+ Powered Speakers Review - YouTube

Our Verdict. Audioengine came out of nowhere with this one! Going from a standard, overall nice A5 series bookshelf speaker, to a mid-tier higher-end speaker in the HDP6. It was a shock to me to hear clarity on this level, for this price, and in an enclosure that small. Yes, I really love this speaker objectively and for the most part.
